PHILLIPS ANDOVER.

Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., begins its one hundred and forty-first year with its full quota of nearly five hundred and fifty boys and with a large number of late applicants unable to secure admission. In spite of the war and the uncertainties involved in the new cations of new boys had to be refused. On Friday, the second day after the opening, no more boys could be received, as every place had been taken.

When the boys returned they were surprised at the changes so noticeable about the grounds. On Sound View avenue all passersby are attracted by the large, beautiful representation of the American flag glowing in rich colors on the hillside. A judicious trimming of the trees bordering the entrance and the drive affords an unobstracted view of the school building, symmasium and chapel and the old mansion.
